

BYRDIE

9 Beauty Products to Get Rid of This Year (and 9 to Keep)

by AMANDA MONTELL | December 13, 2016

Here at Byrdie, it's our job to report on new beauty trends and product launches that would be of interest to you all, our darling readers. And goodness gracious, there were a lot of them in 2016. From rainbow highlighter to rose gold hair to derma-rolling, and beyond, 2016 saw the rise of so many intriguing beauty products and trends.

But nothing can be popular forever. Some products come back every few years, some slowly fade from existence, and others evaporate into thin air as if they never existed (remember body glitter?).

Today, we're talking about the beauty products we don't think will survive past 2016 (plus, the ones that definitely will). We put our heads together to use what we know about product launches, red carpet looks, and runway trends to round up a list of what to keep and what to toss in 2016. Keep scrolling to discover the products no one will be using next year (and what to try out instead)!

Toss: Liquid Eyeliner

7 / 18

We'll give you a moment to process the idea of no longer having to waste 20 minutes in the morning perfecting your cat eye. According to red carpet looks, product launches, and runway trends, sharp winged eyeliner will soon be replaced by softer, warmer looks.

Keep: Shadow Sticks

8 / 18

Nudestix Magnetic Eye Color in Rustique ($24)

Rusty, shimmery eye makeup will be the go-to look in 2017. (Just look at the gorgeous bronzy eye that Gigi Hadid rocked earlier this year.) The good news is that this softer, smokier style requires far less precision. All you need is a good cream shadow, like makeup artist–favorite Maybelline Color Tattoo Eye Shadow ($4), or a shadow stick like the Nudestix pick above.

<http://www.byrdie.com/beauty-trends-2017/>