Kicking off the week with this denim on denim look. Denim on denim is tricky.

Sometimes I love it, sometimes I hate it. I think one key tip is to wear two distinctly different shades of denim. Chambray is one of my favorites, and you'll be seeing a lot of it over the next few weeks (or months). I had been searching for the perfect chambray shirt for a long time, until I found this one from J. Crew. I love everything about it. Being petite, I usually have a hard time with structured, collared shirts. I ordered this one in size 000 and love the fit. It's weighty enough for winter, but not so thick that I can't wear it into spring (with white jeans, yay).

I hope you had a great weekend! My Saturday started out shooting some new outfits with my photographer. (We don't typically shoot on a Saturday, but the weather hasn't been cooperating lately.) I spent the rest of the day hanging out with my little buddy. We went to the toy store, then to dinner at Zoup. Have you eaten there? I'm pretty sure I'm addicted to their Lobster Bisque. I get crazy cravings for it, and we always end up driving 30 minutes to get it. Then I had a random idea to get Johannes' hair cut. He's never had his hair cut by anyone but me. I've been wanting him to get a "big boy haircut" for a while, but a few months ago, I tried taking him to a barber shop. He was really scared and we ended up leaving. Without a haircut. So, I was little nervous, but he seemed up for it, so I just went with it. He ended up sitting really well (I was shocked), and I'm in love with his new 'do. Our Sunday was pretty lazy. We went to church and lunch, then did basically nothing the rest of the day. Sometimes it's nice to just have a cozy day at home (especially when it's rainy and cold outside).

P.S. J. Crew is having a big sale that ends tonight. I've been hooked on their styles, and shopping there a lot lately. For the rest of the day, you can get 25% off your purchase with code "HEARTYOU", or 30% off if you spend $150. HAPPY SHOPPING!
