The Most Under-the-Radar Uses for Your Favorite Injectables

Elise Minton , Executive Beauty Editor | March 10, 2017

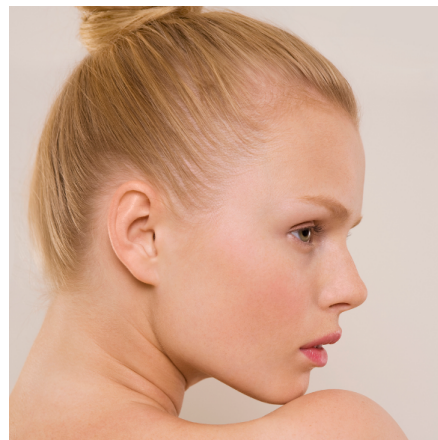

You may love the way your doctor wields his or her needle to inject your favorite fillers and injectables giving you the look that you've always wanted. But for the most part, doctors like to use these products off-label, meaning for a purpose (albeit safe) other than what they are FDA approved for. We asked six expert injectors what their favorite under-the-radar uses are for injectables and fillers—their answers may surprise you.

To add structure to the temples

The temple region is one part of the face that most people don't realize can really age you. As volume is lost from the area, the temples can start to become hollow and sunken. "One of my favorite uses of injectable filler is for filling in the temples," says Troy, MD, plastic surgeon Anthony Youn, MD. "A lot of people have hollowing of the temples with age and loss of fat. Filling them in with either Sculptra Aesthetic or Juvederm Voluma can be a very effective way to treat facial wasting and loss of volume."
