Madonna's Dermatologist Walks Into Sephora... Here's What He Buys for Her

Board-certified dermatologist and celebrity beauty expert Anna Guanche, MD—whose clientele includes glowy-skinned queens like Rebecca Romijn and Olivia Culpo—would snag this cult product at Sephora. It's an "all-in-one lactic acid serum," she describes. "Good Genes smooths out fine lines and wrinkles, and brightens skin."

Dermatologist-approved haircare alert! "This is great for repairing hair from within," says Guanche "It relinks the broken disulfide bonds caused by chemical, thermal, and mechanical damage to the hair."

As for makeup, Guanche would also pick up a jar of this lightweight, blendable loose powder. "I recommend applying it after your foundation but before blush," she says. "This setting powder locks in makeup for long wear and is popular because it doesn't contain light-reflecting pigments, so you won't look 'white' in photos."

Guanche swears by this Sephora best seller for long, healthy lashes. "The hourglass-shaped brush was designed with extra-stiff bristles, so one coat is all you need. Two coats and your lashes are multidimensional," she says. "This also is great because it doesn't contain parabens."

One last makeup pick from Guanche: "I use this every day after contouring," she says. The featherlight powder can be used on the face, eyes, or body for a subtle, stunning glow.
